Workshop Description:

Personalized Learning through student voice and choice tailors instruction, expression of learning and assessment to each individual's unique needs and preferences. While one-on-one instruction geared toward the strengths and challenges of each student has always been an ideal, only in recent years have technological advances allowed it to materialize in education. In this session we will explore an expansive list of ideas that allow students to demonstrate their learning while designing their own rubrics.

Presenter: Dyane Smokorowski

Dyane is the 2013 Kansas Teacher of the Year and is currently serving as an Instructional Technology Coach in the Andover Public schools. Mrs. Smoke, as she's known to her students, believes in a project-based, student-centered classroom that helps students build skills in communication, planning, research and project implementation. She wants her students to develop a love for literature, communication and technology, but also to understand how to use that love and passion to advance their own future, as well as that of their community.
